History of Stonersville Hotel

The original five room structure of the hotel was built in 1733. It became a place of business in 1813 when Phillip Boyer opened a hotel called "The Compass". Mr. Boyer was succeeded by his son John, who sold out to George Stoner in 1847.

George was a man of great energy and determination. He built an addition to the house and also opened a general store to include a post office, established with the name "Stonersville". The title was then applied to the locality and since been continued.

Stonersville Tavern was largely patronized by drovers, and for their accommodations he had a 40-acre pasture opposite the hotel. After a few years, however, business declined due to the railroad.

In 1856 Muhlenburg Brewery was established but only remained a short time. The hotel has been active for many years. The bar and restaurant was started around the turn of the century after Prohibition. Rumor has it the attic housed a speakeasy during the Prohibition years.
